

Children of the Dirt

According to Greek Mythology, Aristodemus (Great-Grandson of Heracles) explained that there were three sexes:

CHILDREN OF THE MOON: Half Male, Half Female.

CHILDREN OF THE SUN: All Male.

CHILDREN OF THE EARTH: All Female.

All had four arms, four legs, and two heads ... and were blissfully content.

Story has it that Zeus became jealous of the humans' joy, so he split them all in two. This punishment was called "The Origin of Love," aptly named by Aristodemus, because ever since then, all have been searching desperately to find their other halves.

But the story wasn't complete. There was a fourth sex ...

CHILDREN OF THE DIRT

These children were born with two arms, two legs, one head and some were male, the others female. The Children of the Dirt found the other sexes to be completely insufferable. When they were around them, they grew more frustrated and depressed.

The Children of the Dirt were so miserable that they invented wine and art to dull their pain. It helped, but not completely.

Zeus took pity on the like-minded Children of the Dirt during his rampage and left them whole.

TO THIS DAY:

Happy gay couples descend from the Children of the Sun.

Happy lesbian couples descend from The Children of the Earth.

And happy hetero couples descend from the Children of the Moon.

But the vast majority of humans are descendants of Children of the Dirt. Destined to eternally search the earth not sure what they're looking for. Because there's not another half for them ... they are one within themselves.
